MEET OKLAHOMA.

His name is James Surine. 43 years old. Married, five kids – two in college. Camper. Gardener. Street rod builder. Began as a painter for a commercial air conditioning and refrigeration manufacturer at MidAmerica Industrial Park. Now, 20 years later, he's their Director of Logistics.

James is just one part of Oklahoma's most treasured resource: our people. Those men and women that make our state great. Individuals that exemplify our native strengths of tenacity, integrity, and ingenuity.

Like many other economic development organizations in Oklahoma, we are tasked with recruiting new industries to our state. It's a complex and difficult job trying to convince a business to locate their operations here. But, it becomes a whole lot easier when they meet someone like James.
